Message From Scott Ochoa

Glendale City Manager

It's budget-time again in Glendale! From the hours and hours of study sessions, the City Council considers and distills spending priorities on everything from public safety to recreation services to infrastructure. The $819M projected budget for FY 2017-18, which includes a General Fund budget of roughly $210M (covering services like police, fire, libraries and parks), is balanced and reflects investments in the kinds of public infrastructure projects that help support property values and our residents' and businesses' quality of life. Just as important, this budget is tethered to our Five Year Financial Forecast, which projects stability and fiscal conservatism over the coming years.

As you might presume, achieving and sustaining this balance of wants and resources is not easy, and the Mayor & City Council have labored conscientiously and earnestly as stewards of the public trust. As difficult as it is prioritizing among many worthy projects, programs and needs, they do their level best to diligently and objectively consider outcomes and impacts on people. Make no mistake, as practical as this spending plan is, there are still many more priorities in the community that deserve collective action and attention. Some efforts are largely beyond local control - state mandates governing prison terms, pension costs, the ability (or inability) to effectively provide quality affordable housing, to name but a few. However, to the extent that we believe equally in the concept of value (making sure that the City of Glendale remains a high-performance organization for the benefit of our citizens and customers) and the power of optimism (believing that there is reasonable solution for every problem and an equitable response for every challenge), the Mayor and Council have charged the Management Team and staff with developing networks and relationships beyond our city departments and finding ways to collaborate with community partners, both public and private. From GUSD and GCC to our local hospitals, community groups and HOAs, to strategic business partners and investors, all of us together are better able to stretch a nearly $1 billion budget as absolutely far as possible.

To be sure, relationship building and multi-benefit solutions are extremely complex and rarely are they fast-moving - if they were, then private industry would have already cornered the market. Equitable governance is difficult and multifaceted. Yet if we can commit to these concepts and try our best to wade through the nuance in search of both-win solutions and/or learn how to disagree agreeably on everything from

Glendale Fire Department Rated Class 1

Your Glendale Fire Department is proud to announce that it is once again rated as a Class 1 fire department by the Insurance Services Office (ISO). The ISO is an organization that independently evaluates municipal fire protection efforts, evaluating over 50,000 fire departments throughout the United States.

In all of California, less than 20 cities carry the esteemed Class 1 rating, the highest possible score given to any fire department, which represents exemplary fire protection in the community. Fire Chief Greg Fish is proud of this accomplishment, "This is another example of Glendale's commitment to public safety. The City's leadership and the hard work of the men and women of the Glendale Fire Department have made this possible."
